01 The AI search visibility gap

We asked ChatGPT, Claude, and Perplexity the question your future guests ask:

> “best luxury safari lodges in Naboisho for a private trip”

ChatGPT cites SafariBookings & aggregator blogs; direct booking engine missing from AI results for Naboisho conservancy. The assistants named SafariBookings — not your direct site. High-intent international travellers planning by AI are routed straight to the platforms, at 15–25% commission on every booking.

02 What the commission is costing you

Industry OTA commissions run 15–25% (roughly 18% on average, charged on the VAT-inclusive rate). Against Mara Nyika Camp (The Boutique Safari)’s room and rate profile that is an estimated $5,400 a month — about $64,800 over a year — on bookings that could arrive direct. These are estimates from public rate and occupancy benchmarks, not a promise; we confirm the real figure with you on the call.

03 Google Business Profile & schema deficits

- The assistants answer travel questions for your area without ever naming your direct site — every answer routes the guest to an OTA.
- No direct-booking intent pages exist for the searches that end in a reservation, so the OTAs keep the head terms uncontested.
- Listings and rates are inconsistent across the web, so AI engines cannot confirm what and where you are.

04 The 3-step recovery roadmap

1 Inject Lodging & safari entity schema and allowlist the AI crawlers (GPTBot, PerplexityBot, ClaudeBot) so ChatGPT, Claude, and Perplexity can read and cite you by name.	2 Rebuild your Google Business Profile taxonomy — primary and secondary categories (Hotel, Lodging, plus your niche categories) — to claim a top-3 Local Pack spot.	3 Publish direct-booking intent pages for the searches guests actually run, so the reservation lands with you instead of the platform.
